It comes as no surprise that American teens experiment with drugs at some point in their lives. While some of them only try drugs once, others go on to become addicted. Drug addiction in adolescents can have far-reaching health implications because they are still growing and their brains and bodies aren't fully developed yet.

As efforts increase to educate teens about the dangers of drug abuse, we should also ask ourselves how they get their hands on these drugs in the first place. Where do these drugs come from?

Where Do Teens Get Drugs From?

- From their parents or other adults. It may come as a surprise to many that teenagers can easily access some drugs, especially opioids right at home. As more doctors and pharmaceutical companies continue pushing opioids to adults, these drugs are finding their way into more homes than ever. This creates a problem as teens can simply pinch some of the pills, believing them to be less harmful than illegal ones because they come with a prescription. Of course, this isn't true and many teens have become unwittingly addicted to opioids this way.
- From school. Teenagers also have access to drugs from their peers and friends at school. When parents think of drug dealers, they may think of those guys hanging out in corners waiting to push drugs. However, many teens report having gotten drugs from teen dealers at school with some even having friends who sell drugs.
- From parties. Teen parties can get wild and out of control. It's no surprise that these parties are the perfect place for teens to get drugs. Sometimes this happens right under their parent's noses. With teens being at a stage in life where they desperately want to fit in, many of them may take drugs because their friends are doing the same.
- Through social media. A lot goes on in social media platforms that parents may be unaware of. With so many celebrities glorifying drug use, teens come to think that it's normal. Additionally, the anonymity afforded by social media means that teens can contact dealers and purchase drugs that were traditionally harder to come by.

Take Charge Today

As a parent of a teen, it's important to have an ongoing conversation about the dangers of drug use. It's also crucial to know what goes on in your teen's life.

If you have a loved one who's struggling with addiction, Findlay Recovery Center in Ohio can help. We conduct thorough assessments before admitting individuals to our drug treatment or residential alcohol treatment programs. This ensures that our addiction treatment programs are tailored to suit individual needs.

We pride ourselves on offering affordable addiction treatment and care and would be glad to help you find lasting, sustainable recovery from drug & alcohol abuse. Get in touch with us today and let u help you find the best options for your treatment.

Latest Posts

Opioid Detox, Rehab, and Addiction Treatment in At Findlay Addiction Ohio Recovery When looking at the addiction trends in Ohio, it's difficult not to notice the high incidence of opioid addiction. Synthetic...

Addiction can be a lonely experience, but your recovery will have a much greater chance of success if you reach...

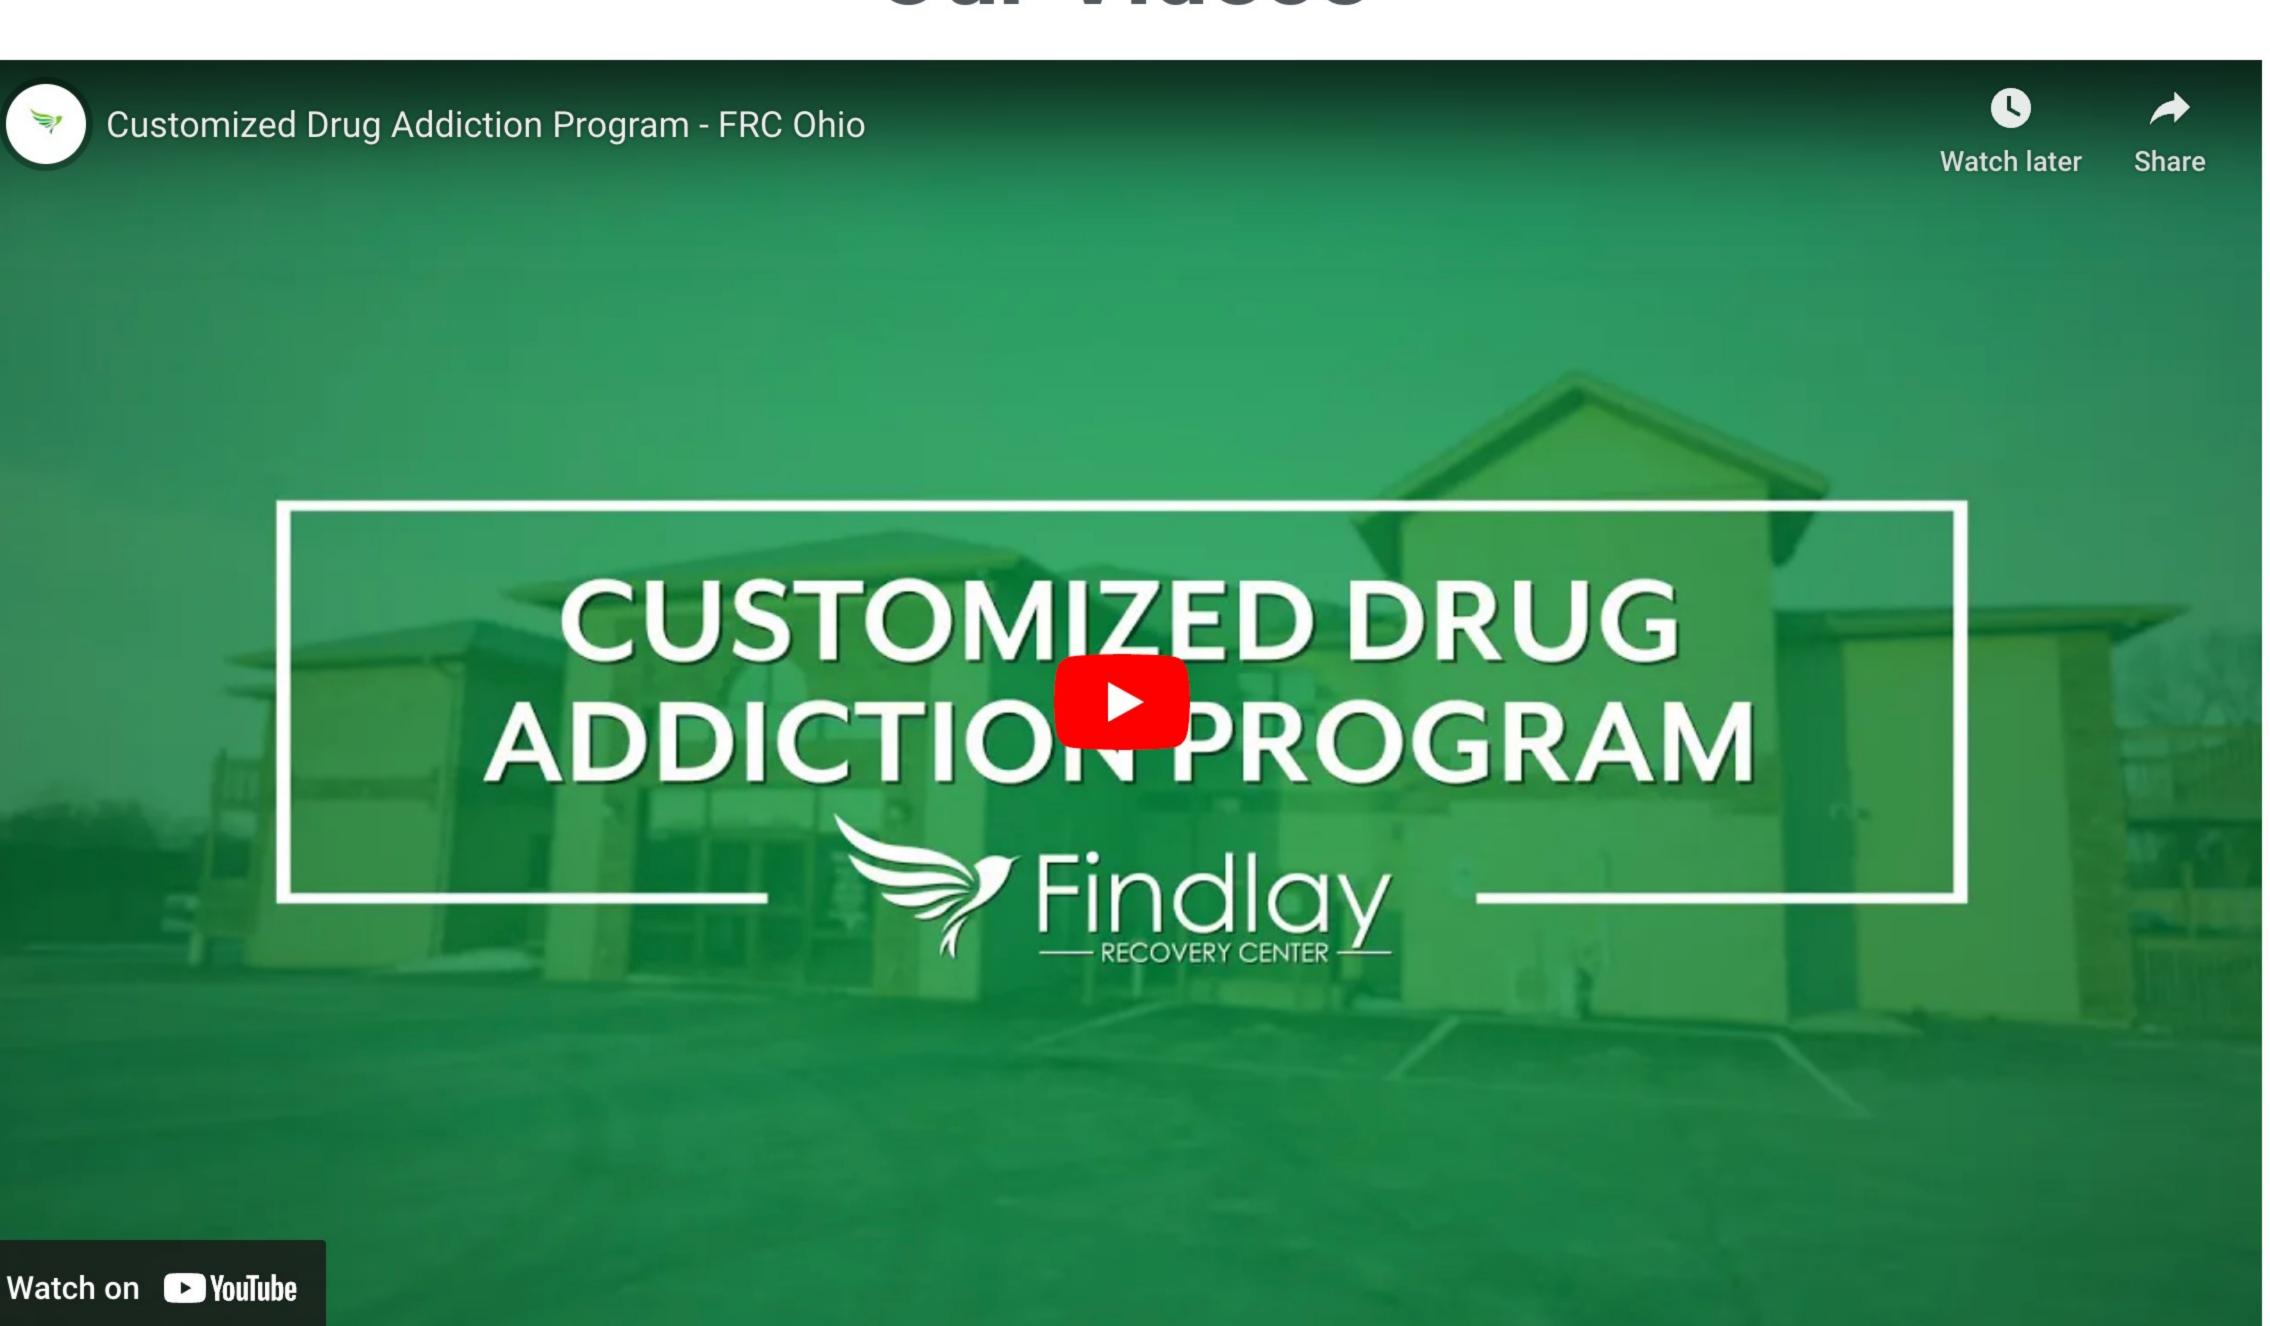

Suffering from Withdrawal Symptoms-Infographic

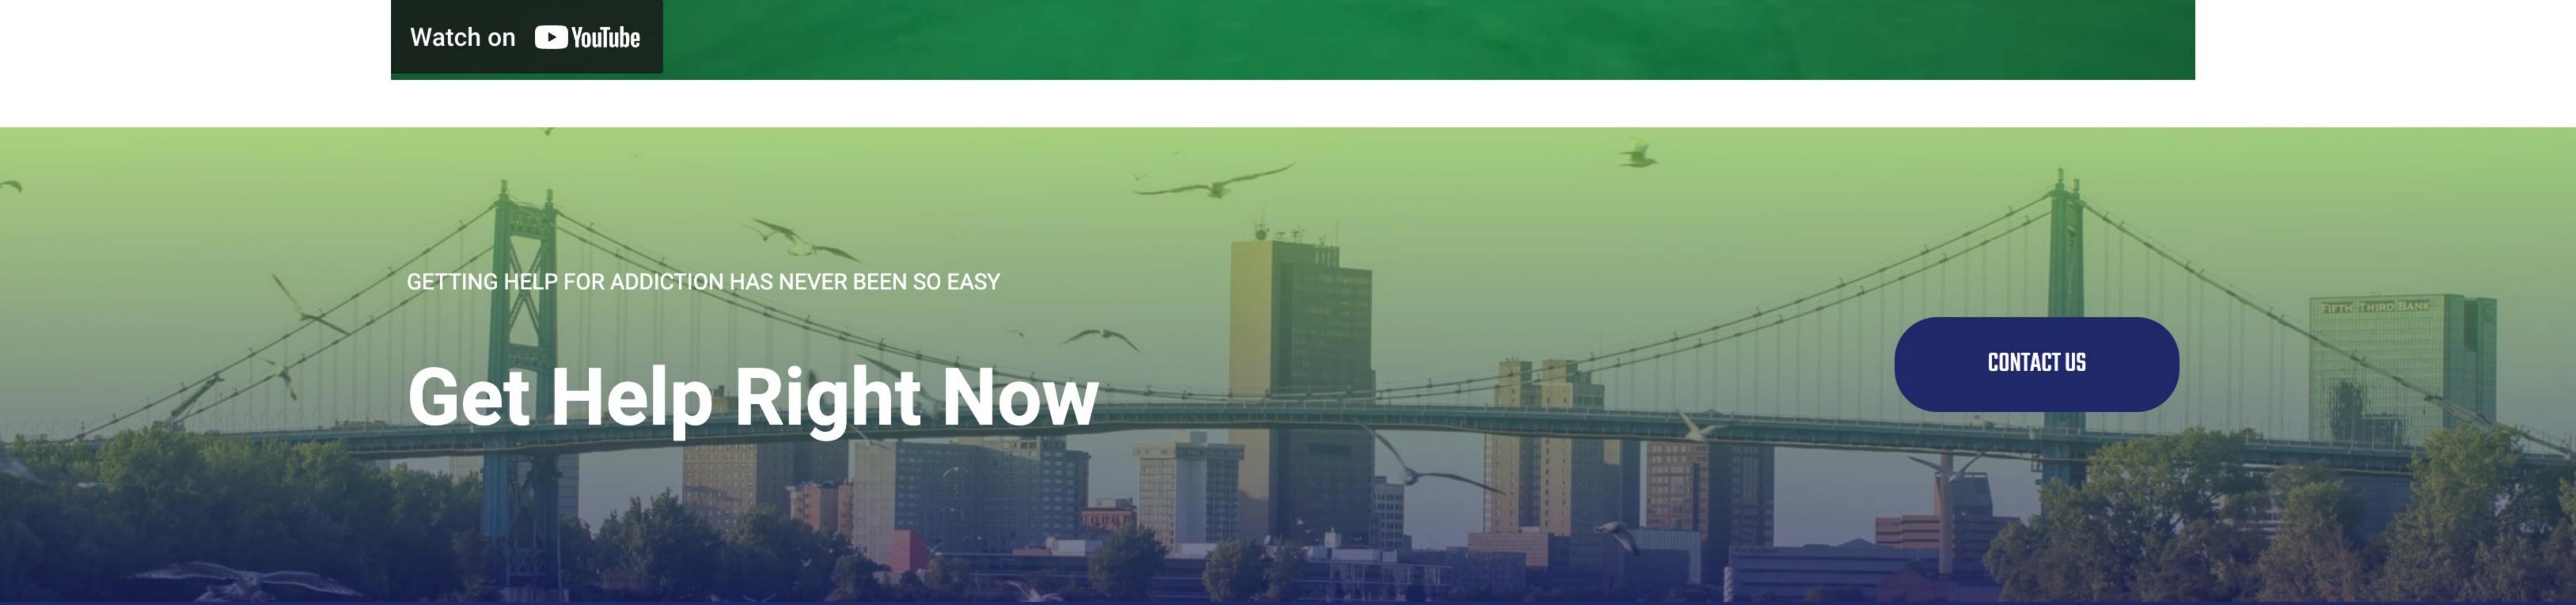

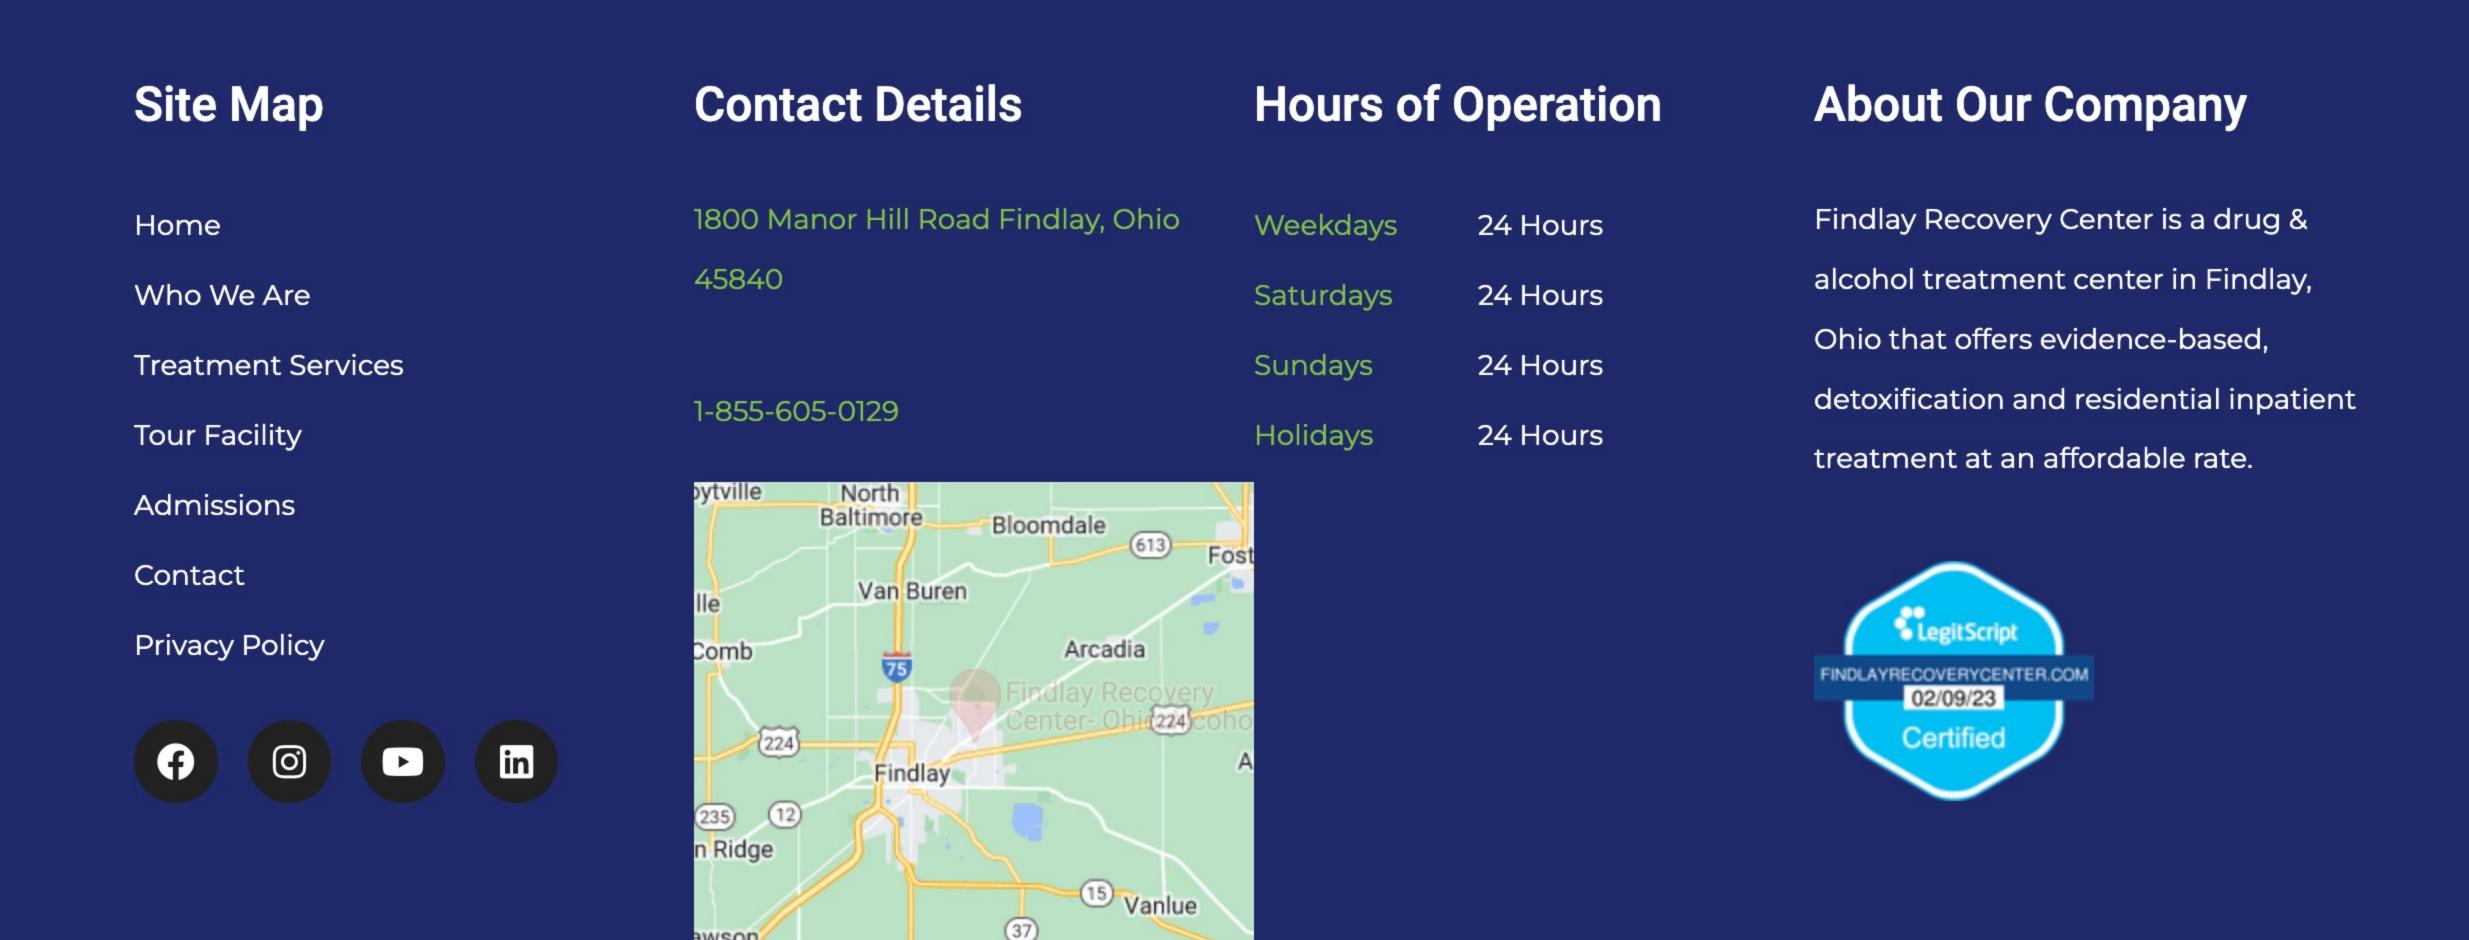

Stages Of Drug Addiction And When To Seek Rehab For Addiction Treatment

Drug addiction can be a difficult thing to overcome. It often starts with casual use, but before you know it,...

Our Videos

Houcktown