

Identifying Signs of Substance Abuse Addiction

VERIFY MY INSURANCE

Substance abuse addiction signs are substance abuse effects that are the result of their involvement in behavior. However, there are certain behaviors that may indicate that someone is struggling with addiction.

This blog post will discuss some of the most common signs of substance abuse addiction. If you suspect that someone you love is addicted to drugs or alcohol, please seek professional help immediately.

1) Unexplained Mood Swings:

People who are struggling with addiction experience dramatic and unexplained mood swings. These can range from extreme highs to intense lows, and they often last for several days or longer. This can be a sign that someone is using drugs or drinking alcohol in order to cope with their emotions.

Be sure that you take them to professionals as soon as possible if you notice any drastic changes in their mood.

2) Physical Changes:

People who are addicted to drugs or alcohol can often experience physical changes due to substance abuse. They may have a hard time sleeping, develop dark circles under the eyes, or lose weight rapidly. In addition, they may suddenly become more withdrawn and stop participating in activities that they once enjoyed.

If you notice any of these physical changes, take them to Findlay Recovery Centre.

3) Financial Struggles:

Addiction is often expensive, and addicts may struggle to maintain their financial obligations if their addiction has become unmanageable. Addicts may borrow or steal money from family and friends in order to purchase drugs or alcohol. They may also neglect to pay bills, which can lead to serious financial problems.

Seeking professional help is the best way to address substance abuse addiction.

4) Neglected Responsibilities:

Addiction can cause people to neglect their responsibilities, such as work or school. Addicts may also begin to isolate themselves from friends and family members, which can lead to feelings of guilt and shame.

If you notice that someone is suddenly disengaging from their responsibilities, it could be a sign of addiction. Encouraging them to seek professional help is the best way to help them overcome their addiction and reclaim their life.

5) Uncharacteristic Behavior:

People who are addicted to drugs or alcohol may begin engaging in behaviors that are out of character for them. This could include reckless driving, illegal activities, or violent behavior. This is often a sign that addiction has taken over their lives, and they are unable to control their own behavior.

If you notice any of these uncharacteristic behaviors, contact Findlay Recovery Centre for help.

Identifying signs of substance abuse addiction can be difficult, but there are ways to help those who are struggling with addiction. Seeking professional help is the best way to ensure that someone receives the care and support they need in order to overcome their addiction. If you or someone you know is struggling with alcoholism or drug addiction, please reach out for help today.
